New Mission: Self Care

Adapt, Overcome, and Improvise

- As of now, life must adapt to a new way of living, which will incorporate a large amount of social distancing and self-isolation
- For many veterans, this can lead to a whole host of negative symptoms which could possibly affect your transition into civilian life
- It is important that you find ways to improve your mental health when sheltering in place

Create a Routine

- Perform the same morning rituals you did before
- Have meals at a consistent time throughout the day
- Try your best to get to bed at the same time each night
- Keep a rough schedule for things during the day; try to eat breakfast, read, or do chores and maybe after lunch, do an online activity or finish some work

Continued Social Interactions

- Stay in touch with friends through texting, phone calls, and video chat
- Go for walks and use that time as an opportunity to get fresh air and a sense of human connection with those who may be doing the same
- Facebook groups are more relevant now, as people become more accustomed to, and more reliant on, online communities for an increasing range of their social needs
- Find virtual meeting spaces, ie: Streaming church services or music events

Ask for Help

- You don't have to be alone. If you or anyone you know needs help, contact the Veterans Crisis Line
